Sales team principles

The following principles are specific to sales. They complement the general principles outlined here.

General principles always go first in case they contradict with sales.

- Act in the interest of the customer. We are not a boiler room that tries to get as many deals as possible at all cost. Our aim is to only convince customers who will benefit from Quaderno.

  Explain what the solution does and does not do. Do not try to cover up weak points. Bring up issues that could clearly make Quaderno unsuitable for a customer. This does not mean going out of your way to indicate every possible disadvantage. Perfect solutions do not exist. But be straightforward and sign customers who will love the product.

- Be proactive. Proactive in sharing constructive feedback and ideas that will make Quaderno better. Proactive following-up. Proactive in doing things that make life easier for our customers. Proactive in suggesting ways to improve the product. Proactive in finding things you should be proactive about.

- Ownership. Don't drop the ball. If you see an issue make sure it is addressed.

  When you say you will do something, make sure you do. You are responsible for everything that happens in your area.

- Grow & Learn. Continuously learn. Try new things. Stay up to date on changes in the product, market and tax landscape.

  You will make mistakes and that is good. Mistakes are the source of learning.

What can we improve?

- What do you think about creating an automated workflow explaining that response times might be higher temporarily? So that we can enable it on special occasions in order to reduce our overwhelming feeling when one person is alone, for instance.
  >> Could be good, to be honest, I think it is a personal issue: I was stressing to get everything done 😅
